

To whom it may concern,

Sami just completed a period of work within the Leadership and Policy Advocacy unit at the United Nations Global Compact. During his time with our team, Sami played an active role in coordinating a cross-functional working group, contributing substantively to compliance monitoring, background research, stakeholder documentation, and preparatory materials for high-level discussions. He was directly involved in the preparation and delivery of two flagship events during UNGA — the Dilemmas Forum and the Private Sector Forum — where he demonstrated the ability to manage competing priorities, liaise across teams, and deliver under time pressure in a high-stakes institutional environment.

Sami is a quick learner with a constructive and analytical attitude. He listens, asks clarifying questions when needed, orients himself independently within a demanding professional environment, and consistently brings a constructive and collaborative attitude to team efforts. While still developing his professional skills, he has shown genuine curiosity for policy and compliance related topics and a willingness to contribute to team efforts.

His enthusiasm and openness to learning will support that growth. I believe he would benefit from an environment where those qualities can be applied and built upon.

Sincerely,

Rubinia Proli
